

Top: CableOrganizer Pelican Micro Case Series ($7.44-$16.77) is crushproof and watertight.

Above: For the too-many-devices-and-not-enough-outlets problem, try the Power Station Traveller ($32.99), which can charge up to three small devices, and Belkin's Universal 120W DC Power Adapter ($109.99) to charge portable devices in a car's lighter or from an airplane's DC outlet.

Get organized

Active vacations are meant for feet in the surf, family-bonding and "crackberrys" placed safely away. If only.

For those who must travel with electronic devices, disorganization can make vacations just as stressful as a typical workday!

CableOrganizer.com, which sells products aimed to help those with annoying cables and wires from home or office equipment, has compiled a list of products to put traveling back in the "stress-free" zone.

Looking around the airport, it wouldn't be hard to find a fellow traveler rocking out with signature white iPod earphones safely in his or her ears. The Cableyoyo POP ($9.95) and the earPod ($9.99) are ways to store the earphone wires to prevent tangles.

If you must take that Blackberry on your hiking or kayaking trip, CableOrganizer suggests a suit of armor from the Pelican Micro Case Series ($7.44-$16.77), which is crushproof and watertight.

For the too-many-devices-and-not-enough-outlets problem, try the Power Station Traveller ($32.99), which can charge up to three small devices, and Belkin's Universal 120W DC Power Adapter ($109.99) to charge portable devices in a car's lighter or from an airplane's DC outlet.
