Belkin TuneBase FM
www.belkin.com

Make it easy to use her iPod in the car with the Belkin TuneBase FM. The audio is crisp and clean, and the built in transmitter makes it easy to connect using multiple channels. The holder also secures the iPod and allows you to position it conveniently.

Memorex Amp Gear
www.ememorex.com

Part of a new line of iPod accessories from Memorex, the Amp Gear docking station makes it a cinch to charge and sync your iPod through your computer or AC adapter. I liked this version of a necessary favorite because it was easy to use and substantial enough to withstand the pile on my desk.

Able Planet Clear Harmony™ Active Noise Cancelling Headphones
www.ableplanet.com

A must when traveling, these premium headphones from Able Planet produce fuller and richer sound while simultaneously shutting out extraneous noises such as airplane engines.

Sleep better than you thought possible, even if the guy with a snoring problem sits next to you. Developed using hearing aid technology, both music and spoken words are noticeably clearer, except, thankfully, the constant announcements on reaching cruising altitude and seat belt warnings. You can sleep thru those now.

Cableyoyo POP
www.cableorganizer.com

Sure, the people in the Apple commercials look cool dancing with their cords, but that doesn't translate so well to the everyday life of an iPod user. She'll love the Cableyoyo POP, a tiny cord winder that attaches with a suction cup to her laptop, iPod or phone. It's even customizable.

iSkin eVo³
www.iskin.com

The first silicone protector to also feature an ultra-clear, scratch resistant screen and face protector, this is the all-in-one protection product she's been looking for. Hip and stylish, I love how iSkins actually enhance the look of the iPod, but are also functional and protect from drops, falls and whatever lurks in her purse. My favorite is the eVo3 special edition, but the Claro is a close second.
