

American Society of Civil Engineers (ASCE)

The ASCE Committee on Critical Infrastructure developed the Disaster Assistance Volunteer Directory (DAVD), which includes a listing of ASCE members who have expressed interest in volunteering for disaster planning, response and recovery initiatives. Members included in the directory can maintain an up-to-date profile that includes their skill set, experience and availability. The directory is available to qualified parties including local, state and federal agencies, as well as private consulting firms – to draw from for engineering expertise in not only post-disaster response and recovery efforts, but also in their pre-disaster planning and preparedness initiatives. The directory is available for use and has more than 500 engineers registered. For more information, including instructions on how to access the directory, visit <http://ciasce.asce.org/ASCEDisasterAssistanceVolunteerProgram.html>.
